The bridges will be of iron and those over Little River will have a hundred feet span. Several extra trains are being run daily over the C. & P. road hauling iron and cross ties to Gracy, from which place they are distributed along the O. V. as fast as needed.

One Injury Relieves Another.

Several years ago in a shooting scrape between the Stanley brothers, colored, and Col. Elzing, white, in the Northern portion of the county, in which the latter was killed, a stray ball struck Jasper H. Stinnett, a bystander, in the arm. The ballmen of the injured limb contracted and rendered the hand and fingers almost useless. A few days ago while Stinnett was assisting in loading a log on a wagon near Englewood the log became unmanageable and knocking him down rolled over him. One of his legs was caught and the leaders were badly mangled and torn. Medical aid was soon on hand and when the injured man was made comfortable it was found that the paralysis of the arm had perfectly disappeared and that he could use his hand and fingers with perfect ease.

Obituary.

Adrian, only son of F. J. Nottingham, died of consumption at his father's residence, near Poe Dee on the 26th of April, at the early age of 19 years. He was a youth of much promise and died of his illness. He was always ready to look upon the youthful dead, but doubly so when accompanied by a blighted name. The stigma that rests upon his character is by far too deeply dyed. Being man is too severe in judgment upon his fellow beings. No eye but God's can fathom the depth of man's misdeeds, no judgment but His is just. When questioned upon the subject of his failings he said to a friend, "If men would see me as I am, I would not judge me so harshly." Disease and death have done their worst and he now sleeps in the silent city of the dead. Reverently we resign him into the hands of an omnipotent God, who in His own appointed time will reveal the secrets of all hearts. We trust that he will one day awake to sing the merits of Redeeming Grace. A. E.
